WEATHER OF CONCERN

Weather of Concern

Northern California:

- Temperatures will be very warm this week as high pressure strengthens over the Sierra. Highs will climb into the triple digits for lower valley locations. As temperatures increase, so do potential heat-related impacts.
- Monsoonal moisture will bring chances for showers and thunderstorms to the higher elevations late week into the weekend.
- A Fire Weather Watch is in effect from Wednesday afternoon through Wednesday evening and again Thursday afternoon through Thursday evening, for thunderstorms and strong outflow winds for portions of the eastern Sierra, to include Alpine County.
 - The north edge of the thunderstorm activity will have limited rainfall with lightning caused fires probable.
 - Gusty and erratic outflow winds of 40 to 50 mph can be expected near thunderstorms.

Southern California:

- Thunderstorms are possible this week for portions of Southern California, mainly in the mountains and deserts. Some light showers are possible everywhere. Flash flooding is possible for the more strong and stationary storms.
- A Fire Weather Watch is in effect from Wednesday afternoon through Wednesday evening and again Thursday afternoon through Thursday evening, for thunderstorms and strong outflow winds for portions of the eastern Sierra, to include Mono County.
 - The north edge of the thunderstorm activity will have limited rainfall with lightning caused fires probable.
 - Gusty and erratic outflow winds of 40 to 50 mph can be expected near thunderstorms.

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

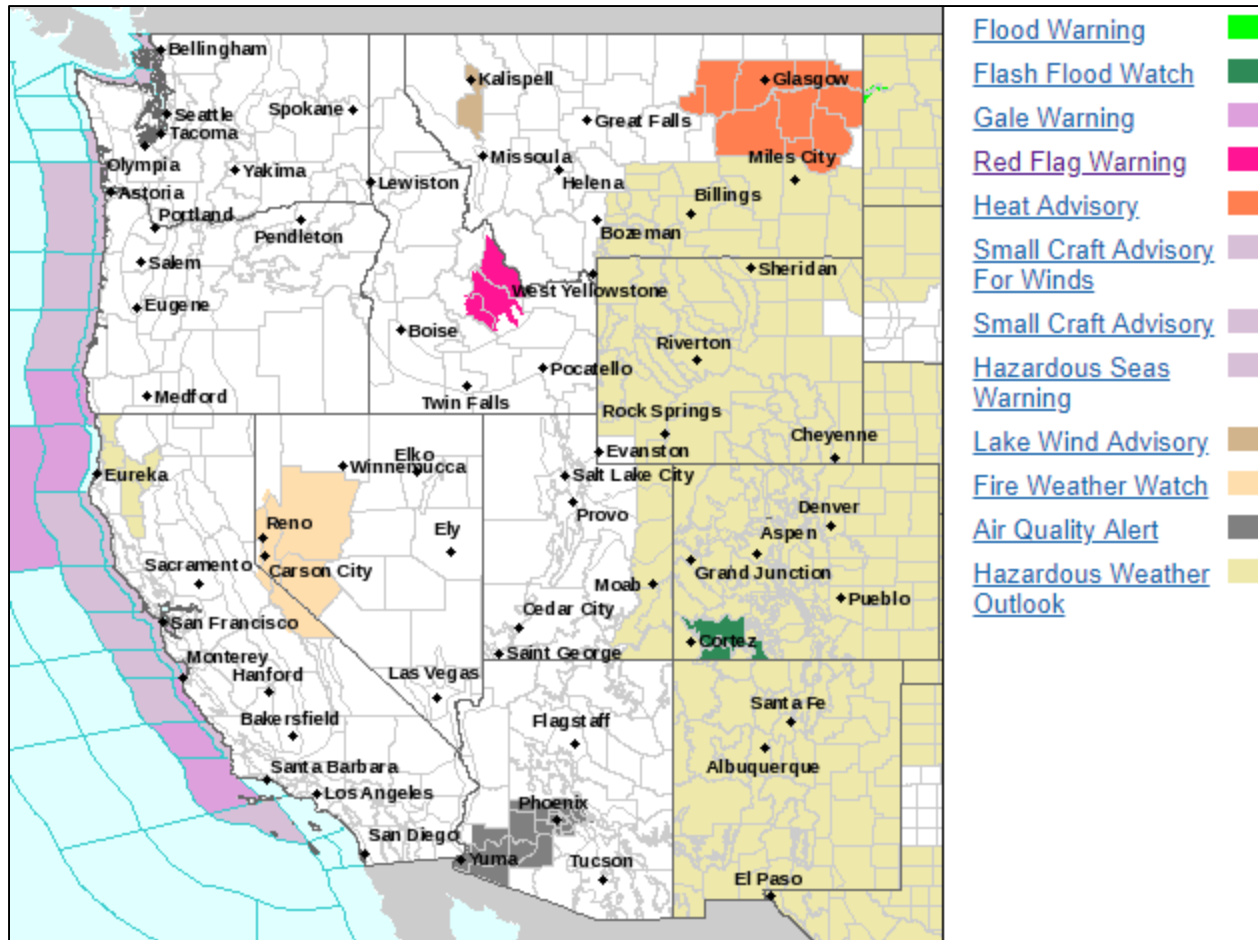

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Temperatures are forecast to remain hot, through the week. Monsoonal moisture will bring chances for showers and thunderstorms to the higher elevations late week into the weekend. Thunderstorm activity in the eastern Sierra will bring elevated fire weather concerns Wednesday and Thursday.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Temperatures will generally be near normal across Southern California. Monsoonal moisture will bring showers and thunderstorms at times through Thursday, especially over the mountains and deserts, with the greatest chances during the afternoon for today and Wednesday. Thunderstorm activity in the eastern Sierra will bring elevated fire weather concerns Wednesday and Thursday. Some drying will reduce afternoon thunderstorm chances near the mountains for Friday and Saturday, but some additional moisture could return for early next week.
